Write help and tips Use the tips below to improve the writing process for your young author and help keep them busy. 1. Writing is important Show your second grader. For example, when you write things down, do it in front of your child. You can make it more powerful by reading aloud what you record when you write it. Explain the value-writing offers in the situation. Do what you can to help your child see the value of writing. 2. Proper writing tools Ensure that your child has the right writing tools. This means the correct writing paper for your child's age. The paper can have lines, no lines, or a fun pattern on it that your child loves. Children also enjoy writing with their own special creations, pencils or markers. You can make getting your child's writing tools a big deal. Leave your second grader at 100 years. After all, they support learning an important life skill. 3. Easy access to writing tools Leave plenty of paper, crayons, markers and pencils available for your child to use when they feel creative. Encourage your kids to draw and scrub as much as they want. Moreover, mix it up and ask kids to sign and write about activities they did that day. You want them to get used to writing things off, especially in this era of 4. Encourage writing to help you to write, write, write. Write when they're happy, when they're sad, and when they're not sure how they feel. Ask them to write funny stories or their name over and over again. You can have them detect the letters of their first name. Ask them to read back everything they've written for you. To further encourage a child's writing skills development, do not correct the child about the mistakes he or she makes. In doing so, they can finally feel bad about writing. Remember, this is the writing of the practice, not a test. If you decide to go ahead and correct errors, you should be soft. This will help your child feel a little better about your feedback and not take it to heart. 5. Make learning write fun! Learning to write doesn't have to be a problem or boring for kids, rather you can make it fun. When learning any new skill, it should interest and engage a child. Consider playing games together that involve writing. For example, you can play hangman or Scrabble. You can even create a word search that has your child's name in it. Don't forget to encourage your Grade 2 kid to write some fun stories that will make you both laugh and be sure to encourage them to draw a lot of photos if they're the more artistic type (or even if they're not). 6. Reward your child's writing efforts When offering writing help for second graders, it's important that you reward your child when doing a good job. It could be with their favorite food, a special trip to the grocery store to buy their favorite snack, or spend quality time together. The reward could even be a new pack of tags and sergeants. Remember, when you write, you and your child can have a good time. You learn and laugh together. Plus, you make fun memories that will last a lifetime If you enjoy these Writing Scores for 2nd grade students, please share them on Facebook, Twitter and/or Pinterest. I appreciate it! Until next time, keep practicing those writing skills with your second graders... Sincerely, Journal Jilljournalbuddies.com creator and curator curator
